Masters Degree (MA) in Dialogue Studies

An exciting new Masters degree exploring the approaches of government and nongovernmental agencies to the crucial issues of intercultural dialogue, social cohesion and citizenship. The course fills a gap in postgraduate education provision by focusing on the significant uses of intercultural dialogue in contexts not marked by armed conflict. It explores the theory and practice of dialogue through a unique combination of taught subjects, skills-based training and a London-based internship.

Who is it for ?

- Students wishing to explore the theory and practice of intercultural dialogue in the UK context, and in conflict situations abroad
- Professionals and aspiring academics interested in core social issues such as intercultural dialogue, community relations and citizenship
- Activists and dialogue practitioners looking to develop their understanding of relevant social theory while enhancing essential dialogue skills

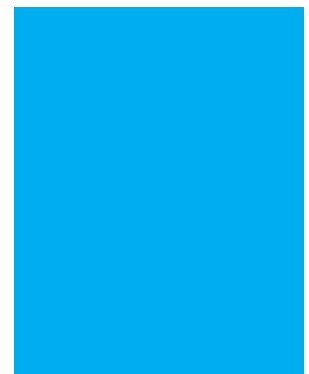

The MA offers:

- A cutting-edge combination of taught academic subjects, research, skills-based training and internship
- A postgraduate course designed and delivered in partnership by Keele University's internationally renowned School of Politics, International Relations and Philosophy, and the Dialogue Society, a dynamic London-based dialogue charity.
- A broad, interdisciplinary range of options including modules from the departments of International Relations, Sociology, Public Policy and Politics
- A head start in professional experience through an internship at the Dialogue Society in the heart of multicultural London
